Introduction to the issues in health research ethics with contributions from leading Australian and international health researchers

The clash between the public right to know and public safety is just one of the fundamental conflicts raised by Hurst and White. In this, the first definitive study of ethics in the Australian news media, Hurst and White explore the concept of ethical conduct, apply it to journalism, then draw on a wealth of local examples where the news media's conduct was challenged. They examine the attempts to codify the principles from the policies of press councils to the journalists' own codes of ethics and show where these are inadequate, muddled or honoured in the breach. They put forward some provocative ideas for reform.

This issue comprises a selection of papers presented at the inaugural international media ethics conference held in Canberra, Australia, in July 2002. The papers selected are representative of some of the central themes of the conference, such as managing the newsroom and editorial independence, limits on press freedom, ethical standards and credibility, investigative journalism and commercial constraints on the media.
